d. Business competitiveness

Our goal is to meet the significant and growing challenges of Transportation. We'll use governmental and institutional back-up. A three-pronged approach can help build and strengthen competitiveness: closer business-government partnership; effective networking of national agencies involved in the value chain; and optimal use of new technologies.

The main challenge facing other transportation companies is how to take advantage of new resources and markets while dealing with intense and growing global competition. The challenge facing governments is how to design and implement supportive policies and strategies. Business and government both need to intensify their partnership to build and strengthen competitiveness.

In using this approach we will maneuver policies and create opportunities for growth and development, while leaving opportunities for change.
